Nokia is going to launch an app store for the Symbian platform at next week's Mobile World Congress in Barcelona? That's a rumor about the Internet this morning. Russian blogger and editor of Mobile-review.com Eldar Murtazin, russia's largest mobile technology site, claims to have seen Nokia's new app store, according to a translation by Unwired View. Sorry, was that confusing? Then let's summarize: According to one blogger found by another blogger, who claims to have seen it with his own eyes, Nokia is on the verge of launching the App Store. Google has already tried to repeat its success on their Android OS with the Android Marketplace, and fellow Symbiante Samsung opened their app store last week, and now the Wall Street Journal says Microsoft can get into online bazaars and app action. With all these new online stores for mobile devices, I think you can say that the mobile phone industry is running an app sh-- for the app. Note: After clicking on the link in the article, you can get a small fee when you buy things.
